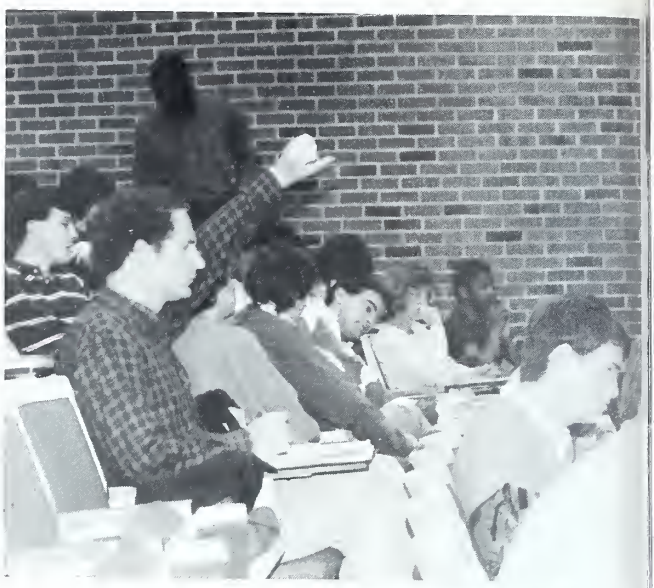
The Shelf In My Closet



"Welcome to medical school," they said,
as I sat in my seat that first day.
"You are now among the best
We have chosen you because you will succeed.
We have much to teach you . . .
You have much to learn."
I smiled from my chair . . . eager to begin,
naive and adventuresome was I,
stubbornly seeking to prove that I would make it through.

"Let us lighten your load," they said.
"Here. Take this white coat and give us your jeans and your tennis shoes.
We must make you respectable," they said.
I waited a moment, eager to receive help . . . and yet not sure . . .

"Med school will keep you very busy," they said.
And I nodded, for I was prepared.
"There is much too much to ever learn . . ."
this they said they understood.
And yet each of them added to the impossible load saying,
"this is very important - - and it's on the test."

Suddenly there wasn't much room for fun or for feelings for KNOWLEDGE was the key.
Long hours became a ritual . . . a sort of insane rite of passage and something to endure.

"You've no time for faith," they said, "and besides . . .
it's not useful now. Better put it aside."
I cried out "NO", but they just smiled and said
I was too young to know.

"It's best to distance yourself from your patients," they said.
"Emotions can weigh you down . . . you don't want that."
I wept . . . for I knew the pain that would break my heart in days to come for sickness hurts.
But I had no choice . . . there was no time to feel.

"You must do better," they said, "to be really successful.
Put your novel on the shelf . . . we have important things for you to learn about a thousand-thousand particles which hold the meaning of life."

So gradually I began to carry away the pieces of me that couldn't keep up with med school.
I wrapped them all neatly and put them away . . .
up on the closet shelf.
I put away a million memories of carefree days and the simple trust of my childlike heart.

I boxed up grief that I was too busy to deal with and love that took too much work to maintain.
And I told myself that there would be a day to dust those treasures and enjoy them again.

"You're becoming a physician," they said and they smiled with pride . . .
but I cried because I knew that it wasn't me at all.
I was up on the closet shelf.

Fall-First Year 1987

Author's Note March, 1991

Rereading this piece makes some of the pain and bewilderment of first year hit home again. But it doesn't stop there. Coming out of medical school on the other end is exciting and I can truly say that I am emerging as myself . . . not some product of education. "They" in the piece often seems to refer to the faculty here at UNC but I want to make clear that I hold no anger toward any of them. In fact, the faculty and administration are wonderful and in many cases they helped me to get through all of this. Instead, in a much larger sense, "they" refers to the system which I felt was trying to control me. In time, I learned that it didn't have to be that way . . . that part of growing up meant learning to manage in a world that made a lot of demands on me without losing what was most important to me. It can be done!! To all of you still here in school, hang on to what matters. To all of us graduating and going on, congratulations, and use the same lesson to start over again in internship.

Listen

I last my first patient taday. Mare generally — the warld last anather individual. Simultaneously, an infant was barn in labar and delivery. The jay of ane family was mirrored by the terrible feeling af lass by anather. One glass was full while the ather was empty.

Surely much is ta be learned fram this experience. It cannat be lectured an in class af fairly portrayed an film. TP died taday and will never be back in the farm in which she existed ane day aga. But it is abviaus that she will cantinue ta live in the faces of her grandchildren and in the minds af all thase wha ever knew her. Haw can I, who knew this lady anly far such a shart time, be sa sure that she will cantinue ta make an impact on this earth? I mean this was a very rural, simple lady by warldy standards. She didn't even awn a secand car ar have a vacatian hame. Sa haw can I be sa sure that tamarraw she will nat be fargatten? Is it her lot to be just anather gravestone with twa bouquets af plastic flawers an tap of it ta mark her spat?

I guess there are na guarantees that histary will chranicle TP's existence, but, in my shart time with this lady, I saw an entire family rally around her. There was na family bickering that I cauld discern. Everybady wanted what was "best far grandma." It became abviaus ta us as health care providers that what was "best far grandma" was nat ta have her chest cracked apen, na heraic measures. What she needed, as did her family, was the assurance that grandma had received the best care that madern medicine had to offer. There were na magic bullets. Na quick fixes. In truth, there was nathing that cauld be dane. Grandma at 83 years yaung had been "struck dawn" by multiple organ failure. Relatives still asked why and they had the right ta ask, even thaugh we didn't have the answer.

Medicine daes not have all the answers. It never has and, yau might pardan my cynicism, but, I daubt that it ever will. I hape it never daes. This is nat a new revelatian. Gearge Bernard Shaw knew this and stated mare eloquently than I every cauld, "Religion salves all prablems, thus eliminating the prablems af the universe. It gives us certainty, peace and absalute concepts. Science is the direct appasite. It is always wrong. It never salves a prablem withaut expasing a new one."

TP will nat be the last patient that I am fallawing ta die. But as the first, I awe it to my awn educatianal experience ta recagnize that there are certain lessans ta be learned autside af the third year medical school curriculum. Namely, that even in taday's highly-technical, "hands aff" medical warld there is still raam far a human element in medicine. Da nat be lulled ta sleep by the clamor of the CT, the glamar af the MRI, the starched white caat. Even third year medical students can alter ane's perceptian af death. Be there. Suppart. Listen carefully. Talk little. Learn samething nat described in baaks. TP I owe yau a lat.

The Class Of 1991 — Commencement Exercises

Sholom! Sholom, peoce, ond good heolth to the groduoting closs of 1991! Sholom to fomily, friends, foculty ond to the Deon ond his crew which kept the school open ond enobled us to work together these post yeors. I om honored to be before you ond to shore o bit of this wonderful time!

Four short yeors ogo you storted, bringing us your hopes ond your dreoms, your energy ond your post experiences. I met you oll together in one ploce in the Introduction to Medicine closs thot first week. I think thot wos the lost time you were oll in one ploce until todoy, ond todoy will be the lost time you will ever ogoin be oll together. Hence, this is o forewell. This observotion, while true, doesn't cover oll of reolity, becouse there is the world of the mind ond spirit thot tronscends time ond spoce. This other reolity enobles us to remember post friends ond post experiences. It helps us in our choices ond in our self definitions. I know thot one member of the closs, who died suddenly thot first outumn is in your mind ond joins this group.

Groduotions ore time for remembronces ond for celebrotion, for goodbyes ond for best wishes, for congrotulotions ond for hugs, for loughter ond for teors.

We will oll remember your four yeors here ond the chonge we hove shored — in you, in ourselves, in our profession, our university, our country ond our world. All of us during these four yeors hove been immersed in life ond in hope, in deoth ond in despoir.

Todoy I wont you to emphosize life ond hope, becouse thot is whot you represent to me, to your teochers represented here on stoge, to your fomilies ond loved ones in the oudience (ond those who love you ond couldn't be here todoy), to the potients you hove cored for ond hove reloted to olreody ond to your potients of the future.

When you receive your degree todoy ond toke the ooth, you become Doctor/Teocher of Medicine, professing o belief in coring, of ossuming responsibility for coring, ond receiving the honor thot goes olong with this profession. Becouse your predecessors in medicine hove given guidonce through their lives, moybe you con ovoid pitfolls, ochieve excellence ond improve the profession.

This is your lost hour of peorls os UNC Med Students, so I wonted to give you just o few guidelines thot might help. Some of these observotions ore truths thot ore not compotible with the woy things ore currently done in medicine, but you might wont to thir obout them os you move through these coming yeors:

1) It is true thot no one ever looked up from their deothbed o soid 'I should hove spent more time ot the office.' Toke time for yourself ond for your fomily.

2)Close to thot stotement is the orchitecturol observotion thot there should never be o clinic without o bock door. Step outside ot leost every hour.

3) Stoy focused. It is true thot beepers/pogers ore neurotoxic. Develop woys to buffer the beeps ond control the phones.

4) Enjoy your potients. Let them tell you obout their odventure joys, lives, ond volues. Hove you ever heord o fishermon describe his most recent expedition, o grondfother describe the lotest grondchild?

5) Join the Americon Physicions Counter Hossle Group. This is o new orgonizotion I om forming to let the reol physicions express themselves ogoinst the forces thot ore coming between our potients ond ourselves. Seriously, fight for your potients ond fight for your profession. Let those medicol monogers who monoge o money, ond don't understond potients who ore hurting ond dyin understond whot medicine is oll obout. Use ridicule/onger/letters to onyone, this will be theropeutic for you. In your letters to thes people note thot you hove sent corbon copies to your congressmon ond to the newspopers. This will worry the hosslers.

6) Seek excellence in your profession ond in your lives, ond try to define it. Your definition will be personol ond internol. As the prophet Jeremioh urged, "Run with the Horsemen."

The future for our profession is hord to discern — The greot philosopher of boseboll Yogi Berro observed, "I hove seen the future, it is like the post except there is more of it."

Finolly, os we ploce the hood, which is symbolic of possing the montle, don't worry obout being successful, just be foithful — to yourself, to your fomily, ond to your profession.

Hoil! Forewell! Sholom!

— Jomes A. Bryon II, M

Today, we celebrate more than just four years of dedication, ard work and sacrifice. We applaud more than just the raduating students' personal efforts. Today, we celebrate chievement that has been made possible by years of support nd encouragement from our families, friends, present and past gnificant others, and teachers. We know that without you we ould not be here today.

You have nurtured us from our infancy, through the discoveries f grade school, as trying teenagers, as exploring undergraduates, nd finally as harried medical students. You have guided and omforted us. You open our eyes to the world, and taught us to ng and to dance, to learn and to love. You have helped us to liminate self-doubt, and have led us to seek beauty and truth. or this and for so much more, we thank you.

When I was originally planning this speech, I felt that it should eflect the experiences of our class during the past four years, and y to relate to our friends and family a few of the stories which nake our medical school experiences memorable. So I solicited ny classmates for entries from their diaries written during medical chool. Sounds like a good idea so far. Unfortunately, I forgot that nost medical students were too busy to keep diaries. However, I id receive a few entries which I will share with you now.

The first entry was written by a classmate on August 15, 1987 fter spending the day in 105 Berryhill listening to welcoming peeches by various deans. Dean Bondurant told us that starting oday we would have new responsibilities — to respect the bodies f our cadavers and the confidences of our patients. And it was t this point the student realized that going to medical school was ot going to be like just any other graduate school; somehow . . . his was going to be different. She writes: "It amazed me at what fraternity it really is even from day 1. You are in the club. The ules that apply to you are somewhat different than those which overn the lives of other people. I wonder how similar we will ecome through this experience?"

The next was written by a classmate on the eve of the first day f her third year clerkships. She writes: "I found this passage today om my first year notes. The comments are those of Robert Coles. is the advice his physical diagnosis teacher, William Carlos Villiams, had given him when Coles was a third year medical udent. I certainly hope I'll remember his words when I'm on the ards with patients. Williams said: "Watch and listen and let these en and women and children, these patients, teach you. echnique is part of the game, but heart is what really matters."

The final entry was written by a fourth year student reminiscent f his experience with a preceptor in ambulatory medicine. He rites: "I expressed an early interest in academic medicine and ny preceptor responded by including me, wherever he could, in s daily routine. This included seeing patients in the hospital and in clinics, attending and leading seminars, precepting residents in clinics, answering 25-50 phone calls, and often late afternoon housecalls to nursing home patients or to home bound patients. Throughout it all he was always smiling, often laughing — he was always having fun.

Being competitive, I had to identify a trait upon which I could compete. After much thought, I decided that I would at least be as nice as Dr. James Bryan. I started helping invalid patients up on their pillows, replenishing the ice in the water containers and yes, even clipping their toenails. Soon I noticed that I was having much more fun than before, and I believed that I was doing a pretty good job of it. Then, we went to see a patient who was housebound and who was losing his life to a rare neuromuscular disease.

Dr. Bryan drove into the driveway and parked the car. I got out — noticed the unkept yard, and walked deliberately towards the front door. I asked some kind of technical question about the man's condition, . . . but, there was no answer. Dr. Bryan had left my side to go out into the yard and pick up the trash and old newspapers.

Again, I felt inadequate. Not because I could not compete; there never was any competition. Dr. Bryan was never JUST being nice; he was not going out just to SEE this man. He was going out as his CAREGIVER. As always, he was doing what he could . . . This makes him happy. Thank God I did not miss his lesson."

It is evident from these journal entries that these students have learned more than just medical facts during these past four year. They have begun to learn what many have termed "the Art of Medicine".

During our first and second years of medical school, we spent much of our time memorizing facts. It was easy to become focused on exams and forget our original mission: to pursue truth and knowledge and to become physicians.

Also, our mentors have taught us how to be WHOLE physicians. Competence is only half our goal. From the diary entries read, it is clear to me that we have learned the other half of our goal — to have fun with our work and to have understanding and compassion for our patients.

To conclude, I would like to thank my classmates for sharing their dairy entries with me for this speech, but more importantly for their support over these past four years. Since I married one of them, I can honestly say I couldn't have done it without you. Please keep in touch.

Excerpted from the address given by Margaret Woodbury Weeks '91

The Oath Of Hippocrates*

I do solemnly swear by all I hold sacred:

That I will be loyal to the profession of medicine and just to its members.

That I will lead my life and practice my art with virtue and honor.

That into whatsoever home I shall enter, it shall be for the good of the sick and the well by the utmost of my power and that I will hold myself aloof from wrong and from corruption and the tempting of others to vice.

That I will exercise my art solely for the benefit of my patients, the prevention of disease and the promotion of health and will give no drug and perform no operation for an immoral purpose and far less suggest such a thing.

That in the treatment of the sick, I will consider their well-being to be of greater importance than their ability to compenstate my services.

That I will work for the day when all persons have equal access to basic health care.

What I may see or hear in the course of treatment or even outside the treatment in regard to the life of persons which is not fitting to be spoken, I will keep inviolably secret.

That I will commit myself to a lifetime of continued learning of the art and science of medicine.

These things I do promise and in proportion as I am faithful to this oath, may happiness and good repute he ever mind, but should I trespass and violate this oath, may the reverse be my lot
